A Royall Embassage from the Prince of Orange to the wel.affected Subiects in England.

WE E having maturely considered of the disloyal opposition, which have been reflected on our Father, the manifold endeavours of your unwearyed vigilancie, and the obstacles that interrupt the same, with the multiplicity of distractions wherein your Kingdome is dangerously involved did forthwith according to our indulgent affection, think it expedient to premonish and advertise you of the numerous perils which are imminent and impendent over you; it strooke a repercussive griefe and carefull solicitation into our Princely minde, as soone as we had intelligence concerning the same; and that their Stratagems might prove abortive, for the prevention thereof we thought good to shew our zealous duty to his Maiessty, our respective affection to his Parliament, and the future security of his Royall Throne and Realme.

And

And first we predicate unto you the obscurely hatched conspiracies of the King of Spaine, the object of whose sole intents have principally aimed at the destructive ruine of your Nation: Wee have had credible intelligence, that hee is suddenly resolved to raise a strong and formidable Navie (scarce inferiour to that almost Invincible Armado) and with a rushing and unexpected throng invade the Land. Don Pedro affirmed this to be true, and hath conducted many paper-messengers to Us concerning the absolute attestation and credible assertion of the same. Don Pedringano likewise (my singular and intimate Friend) did certifie the same unto mee: Wherefore we lovingly, yea and obsequiously too, premonish you to be circumspective and cautious: For to our certaine knowledge Don Kevalo-Caris is in great preparation to raise and augment his Fleet, as appeared by the Notions of our dearest Friends, But besides this trap, there is likewise a dangerous snaredistended against your Kingdome, which both doe violently threaten a most precipitious destruction: My intent is not mysterious or enigmaticall, but rather very perspicuous to be interpreted, I mean the Frenchmen, who, like the Egyptian Locusts who are resolved to swarme in the realme suddenly; and so imbrew their inhumane hands in the effusive blood of the Protestants.

These with the auxiliary assistance of the rebels bels in Ireland, being link confederates, and once -conioyned in the cruel concatenation of Ty-rannicall conspiracies are able to to precipitate the whole Kingdome at one stroke, if Gods omnipotent hand doe not avert it, and your vigilant endeavours prevent it. Sed meliora speramus, wee hope and expect a more happy, favourable, and propitious event. Yet notwithstanding without any supine procrastination wee humbly beseech for your owne safety particularly, and the Epidemicall security of the whole Kingdome, that you would with Judicious maturity of Councell seriously consider the perillous precedent premises, and you may then encreate, that the consequence thereof is very dangerous.

Wherefore in this respect our humble our humble advice is, that you would bee graciously pleased to fortifie all the chief Coasts and Cinque Ports with Military Armes, and strong Ammunition in defence of the Kingdome, for otherwise nothing can be expected but ruinate and precipitate destruction. Likewise, that you would gravely consider and appoint, that the City of London be strongly provided, and the Tower soundly searched, least any intestine plot should be fomented at home. As also, that all Military Ammunition be provided, and it be forthwith ordered, that the Traine Bands should daily waite for prevention of any conspiracie that should ensue. Thus as we have presented our present care and indulgent sollicitation for the safe-tic tie and welfare of the Kingdome : so likewise we presume to commend respectively our petionary desire to your Honours : First, that your Honours would be graciously pleased to conde-scend to his Maiesties pleasure and Just Command, without repugnance and opposition ; for a distracted varience betwixt a King and his Subjects, is the first Ground and p. incipium of confusion to a Nation. Therefore we humbly impore your honours to conioyne with his Maiesty in a reciprocall concord, that the knot of peace and tranquility may be tyed so securely fast, that all the hell-guided Conspiracies of Forraigne Enemies may be annihilated and abolished. That you would likewise endeavour to concatenate the affections of the people to his Maiesty, that his Royall Prerogative and Imperiall Throne be not violated, and trampled downe by the malicious aspersions of such as are ill affected and dangerous persons in the Realme. That the divisions and distractions in the Kingdome may be allayed and asswaged, to the comfort of his Maiesty, the honour of his Parliament, and the perpetuall peace and prosperity of the Realme.

In the meane time my diurnal prayers assiduous Supplications shalbe invocated upon the mighty and Almighty assistance and auxiliation of God that all your deliberations and determining Councils may be directed to the right object, And for my part I will confirme my resolutions, and am fully intended to assise you with my full power

power and Forces ; and I shall likewise diligently endeavour to repel and detruce those forraign Enemies : And for the Irish rebels wee shall labour to qualifie, and by Gods civine providence assisting us we shall crowne England with an Olive Branch of Victorious Tranquility in the Kingdome.

His Maiesties Consent for the Princeesse Marie going to HOLLAND.

And her Maiestie to accompany her thither.

His maiestie being very much pressed by the States Ambassador to send the Princeesse his Daughter im mediately into Holland : And being likewise earnestly desired by his royall Consort the Queene, to give her majestie leave to accompany her Daughter thither ; hath thought fit to consent to both desires, and to make this his Maiesties resolution known to his parliament.
